Building Skills in MI for Interprofessional Team-Based Practice: An Effective and Versatile Approach

A joint workshop by UW-Madison Continuing Studies and the UW Center for Interprofessional Practice and Education.

Motivational Interviewing is a communication approach that can be effectively applied in many healthcare professional settings. Healthcare professionals, in any area of service, are likely to encounter people who might be reluctant to embrace change in their behaviors, thoughts and attitudes. Everyone on a health/social care team can benefit from learning and incorporating this skill into their interprofessional practice.

Workshop Learning Objectives:

- Discuss the importance of having MI skills and knowledge across a range of professions
- Define your own role in helping people resolve ambivalence
- Describe MI in the context of your profession and the interprofessional team
- Apply MI skills in interprofessional case scenarios
